

The making of friends and foes has strengthened our frame, because the constant tug-of-war in which we are involved has forced us to become tall and strong.